Britannica Academic

To access Britannica Academic (formally Encyclopedia Britannica) you will want to go to the ANU Library homepage. You will notice a “search: box in the middle of the page with a tab called “A-Z Databases.” From there you will want to select the dropdown from the box that says “select a database” and select Britannica Academic and hit go.

One of two things may happen: it may take you directly to Britannica Academic or you may be asked to authenticate (this is mainly for people accessing the database off-campus). All you need to do is enter your Blackboard credentials and sign in, it will then take you directly to Britannica Academic.

There are several research tools available in the menu including World Data Analyst and World Atlas. To find information on your topic, conduct your topic using the search box at the top of the page. Britannica Academic will return results based on your search term. The results screen also offers several research tools including images, videos, journals, primary resources and more!

If you want more, in-depth information about the different aspects of Britannica Academic, you can visit the Library Instruction page.
